

Committed to keeping you on the cutting edge of the distribution industry

ABM will help you meet customer expectations safely while trimming costs and keeping your facility running as effectively and efficiently as possible.

It's beneficial to periodically take a holistic look at your facility program. Are you considering outsourcing to better achieve your goals? If you're already using an outsourcing provider, how effective are they? Here are some key factors to consider when reassessing your facility services program and why ABM may be the right partner for you:

1. STAFFING

When you hire in-house facility services personnel, you carry the burden of managing those employees. They require administrative oversight, training, and management. Partnering with ABM relieves you of that burden, allowing you to dedicate your resources to personnel who are directly involved in your core business —we'll take care of the rest.

2. SERVICE QUALITY

In-house facility services staff may allow for greater control over work quality, but managing them can divert time and energy from your core business. ABM brings decades of warehousing and distribution experience, plus expertise in safety and consumer demands. We offer the best industry practices to ensure service quality that reduces time on task and improves move rates.

3. CONSOLIDATING SERVICES

If you're already outsourcing your facility services, consider consolidating multiple services with one vendor. As a single integrated facility services provider, ABM offers a robust range of services, while ensuring all employees are trained consistently and adhering to best practices for enhanced operational efficiency.

Rethink your facility services

No matter what your current facility services program is, it's important to take time to examine it and anticipate problems before they happen. Your customers have high expectations and don't always know what it takes to meet their needs behind the scenes. Relieve some of that pressure by taking a proactive approach to evaluating your facility services program.
